A PK LIST PROJECT
EDITED BY JIM BENNETT
CONTENTS

JIM BENNETT
The phone call

DOMINIC BOND
6:43pm

LESLEY BURT
Look again and again
The Name Game

BOB COOPER
Channel Four’s rejection letter

JAN HARRIS
In freezing weather, two people sand a door

FRANCESCA HUNT
They didn’t tell me…

DAPHNE MILNE
Saturday night syncopations
Codex interruptus
When planets collide
Sometime in another place

WENDY WEBB
Mounting Concern and Hearts
Say it with Scissors and Sellotape
Wild Woman Gifts and Sparkle

GRANT van WINGERDEN
Curse of the Cursive

WRITERS PROFILES

Edition Copyright 2024 Jim Bennett

All poems Copyright 2023 by the authors.
the phone call

I press the digits for the familiar number and to my surprise get a ring tone I only tried it because well who knows why but in the day no more than four rings and my mother with her phone voice would answer not today though it carries on ringing

I imagine it ringing fifty years ago echoing around the well-worn furniture out into the kitchen across the hall into the parlour best room in the house kept clean and quiet for visitors still no one answers

I wonder if the wallpaper has changed what happened to the big tree in the garden I used to climb a rope tied to a branch and my father once tied one end of a hammock to it and the other end to the fence then I would lie and read swinging and sometimes I heard a distant phone ring the phone is still ringing no answer but it is heard upstairs where my grandmother slept and where aunty May came to stay bringing the statues and pictures that were on the landing silent observers of our coming and going whatever happened to all those things to all those people and to all the years between the phone stops ringing no one answered now the silence is like the sound of the ocean a distant breath of wind a train passing in the night 6:43pm

soz hun gunna be a l8 x

she has another glass sniffs burnt garlic which mingles with vape smoke and deepens the air we’ll do Lisbon x

she throws away peelings turns up the volume and sings the words deep from her throat

I love you x

she pokes the lamb the potatoes aren’t done yet there is a need for a gravy nite x

she turns on silence mode kale softens in a steam bath losing its flavour.
LESLEY BURT

Look again and again

Art is not what you see but what you make others see (Degas)

Van Gogh, says Hockney, writes that Japanese people seek contrasts in taste – such as salted sweets and fried ices – believes, similarly counterintuitively, one should display small pictures in large rooms, and vice versa – crams tiny rooms in the Yellow House with enormous paintings he’s made – his own house, the municipal gardens and, in the guest bedroom reserved for Gaugin, two versions of Sunflowers.

Total immersion in Vincent, says Hockney, who decides to fill his Normandy house with paintings of furniture, fireplace, flowerpots and views outside windows – trees, mountains, sky, in various seasons – sends friends photos of his decor.

The Name Game

The receptionist wrinkles his forehead, attempts: Mrs Mmmm. The patient smiles, repeats it slowly: Mah-oon-ga-nid-zay. Moor-ganzy, says the receptionist.

The patient smiles, repeats, writes it for him to copy. When the nurse calls: Mrs Mar-ganzy, the patient stands, smiles, repeats her name.

The consultant looks up from her desk. Hello, Mrs. Er. Examines her. See the receptionist for an X-ray appointment.

The receptionist wrinkles his forehead. Says: Right. The patient says, Just call me Elizabeth. OK Lizzie, says the receptionist: Let's find a date and time.
Channel Four’s rejection letter

Dear... One-Earring Will? No – Dear William, (be polite!) This, as usual, is a gave-us-all-a-good-giggle read – your un-comical clowns, your inverse transvestites – and like your sonnets, it’s all page-turning stuff. But we need to make the point, and ironically be blunt (if you follow our wit): long soliloquies are too complex for our viewers’ attention though we recognise, now, you’ve less ambiguous smut. Well done. You’ve worked on previous reasons for rejection but you need to know those in our management’s offices love innuendo – they’ll find adverts for figs. They’re sly. Now, back to your script. There’s a few speeches that characters memorably shout or whisper as asides which may become book titles, cliches. So, in this play we’d prefer the actors had plainer things to say.

(Previously published in Listening, listening in 2023 by Naked Eye Publishing.)
In freezing weather, two people sand a door

The door lies quietly on two saw-horse trestles missing its brass hinges and reeded knobs while she, a spring flower in violet beret and soft green gloves, eases the rough edges. The power sander hums, content in her hands.

He, a blue sky, in faded denim jeans and bomber jacket, follows with fine sandpaper wrapped around an ergonomic block. Neither speaks nor falters to proceed in turn with fluent moves to smooth the mullions, panels lock rail and frame, until the patient door is ready to be painted and re-hung in the doorway of a room where they will lie quietly, side by side, on an old divan, or hum contentedly in each other’s arms.
FRANCESCA HUNT

They didn’t tell me…

I didn’t watch the King’s Christmas message to his loyal subjects instead I folded wrapping paper ready to use again when my sons spoke in whispers I thought it impolite but gave them cake and wished them a Happy New Year strong men carried out furniture they took coins from under my bed I made them coffee but forgot their two sugars seat belted rug over my knees I smiled and watched the trees pass at speed a lady with a cheery smile welcomed me on the doorstep I hadn’t been to Rose Cottage before I didn’t know then I wouldn’t be going back home

Saturday night syncopations
in conversation with a jazz musician

_Crepuscle with Nellie_ Do you know how much time we spend chatting on Facetime?

_Time on my hands_
I'd forgotten how hairy you are.

_I'm a fool to want you_ Sorry about the tummy gurgling it must have been the jazz.

_I hear music_
Nice boxers by the way colour co-ordinated with the T I guess for you that's a necessity.

_Perdido_
My collection of odd socks is awesome.

_These foolish things_ Don't worry my subversions are strictly between ourselves — and the bass player the saxophonist the piano player cum clarinettist and my chap from Gongawoola with the feathers.

_The summer knows_ Pink is so not his colour but flamingos only come that way — maybe peacock bluey/green would match his eyes.

_My favourite things_
Not sure if there are peacocks in Australia.
I'll have to go on a _Phasianidae_ hunt.

_Take the A train_
Will update you next time we chat.

_I'll be seeing you_ PS have you got a white T shirt with bright green spots? I remember ...
No — perhaps I'd better not.

_The lady is a tramp_ PPS the drummer doesn't wear socks.

_Only a paper moon_
DAPHNE MILNE

Codex interruptus

You can see people on the other side of the glass wall They move in mysterious ways follow rhythms and un-patterns that make no sense There’s no order no logic in their perambulations And all the time it’s as if they’re speaking Latin vast areas of incomprehension then an odd word half recognised
codex interruptus
Seemingly without volume control they shout and shout and shout How do they bear it piling up bricks of sound why don’t their heads explode If you concentrate you can learn enough Latin to pass to belong to seem to understand that’s when they start speaking ancient Greek and Assyrian and hieroglyphs or Esperanto still they shout — too loud too loud
The inside of your head expands and then implodes
When planets collide

I love him
the strength/length of him does he love me

I hear her voice a symphony of introspection

I love him
the silence of him
the night cries

I see her a column of stillness giving nothing

I love him
the leanness/meanness of him an arrow in the light

I smell her musty like the sea without its savour

I love him
the youth of him juicy in the dark

I taste her lemon sweet a bitter sun

I love him
the edges of him hard as rock

I feel her hands on my heart binding me

binding us
Sometime in another place

1. He's upcountry now — umpteen miles doesn't facebook   telephones or zooms in to Saturday poetry club we exchange poems   give feedback in forensic detail   line by line nice chap — he’s particular with words precise as any dictionary or lawyer so when he calls me 'Darling' it’s unexpected   to say   the least not a word he utters casually flattering and repeated   in the night I realise he's the same age as my daughter he's coming back next month what do I do — I've known him years

2. Thank you for the love I love you too but it wouldn’t work
not the way you hope and telling me that every bloke I meet is gay doesn’t work either especially when I was at boarding school with their wives and know that said wife/wives are fully female and only interested in men I know I’ve seen them naked — there’s no privacy at boarding school and no you are not going to see me naked I don’t do that any more Anyway Alice would not approve she’s a very conventional town Did I mention the age gap Alice wouldn’t like that either and even if none of the above applied 9000 miles is far too far

It wouldn’t work
Believe me   I know
DAPHNE MILNE

re: The Morning Post

My Father always signed his name in blue ink, Quink not Stevens, black was not for gentlemen.

Not being a gentleman, black is my ink of choice although Quink, my favourite, washes out and fades to indigo with amber edges.

This morning’s post a cornucopia of envelopes — unusual for this time of year. I know the senders by the ink blue biro, daddy-long-legs spiked, Mother’s in her manic phase again. Green fountain pen, emerald and looped, Uncle Cissy’s re-reading Oscar Wilde.

Plain black, upright, typed, the Bank Manager or a plea for funds from Charity Central.

Mauve or purple, take your choice, Dear Postman, please, please please do not bother to deliver these Disgusted of Tunbridge Wells or his sister, Auntie Poison Pen, say nothing I would want to read.

MOUNTING CONCERN AND HEARTS

!on travel posting hearts PIC: woodpecker on trunk startled remaining like yesterday last week last month hope you are feeling better and return soon from where? no communication by modern media accidents injuries hospital operations goodbyes family posting final curtains rip woodpecker, please tap you are missed no response nothing mist/missed/remiss commission omission remission safe journey where social media fails to meet be safe and enjoy
!thank you posting hearts have fun like watching paint dry have a wonderful time enjoy your travels where? incommunicado on the moon?
Awesome that's a long trip let me know when you return hope she's ok missing your presence absence/absentia/absentee missing you here missing you trunk call woodpecker hope all's well I hope you will keep well we hope you're ok – can you send a sign?
hope you are well dear friend I miss you
hope you are feeling better and return soon you are missed only woodpecker remains, pecking nine weeks and counting…
WENDY WEBB

WILD WOMAN GIFTS AND SPARKLE

It was said with flowers the name mislaid pink roses and chocolates but what message?

A quick-scribbled card they were badgered to sign crying for history but didn’t see its flourish

One square box padded it travelled far expected a recycled reused gift not some mass-produced souvenir mug

Her Wild Woman verse personalised with photos understood that message but didn’t feel brave

Worried letter from friend’s daughter Care Home happy update disguised as a Birthday card now I’m sad

Two books – unread – favourite Milk Tray a smile a sigh sparkle of jewellery stars or fizz woman dreams on Sea air, red eyes cuppa and read a magazine D’Arcy’s luxury pied-à-terre is nothing to a poet.

GRANT van WINGERDEN

Curse of the Cursive

Look at that lovely old loping style the end of an individual in the way they dot their i’s
The jaunty jutting dash across the page

This sees you well ere a will and graveside wail Your character shows in t’s with bows lots of dots lets us feel indebted in the time you took

II

Beleagured bloggers can only look on message board correspondents exasperated into the ether expired emails saved on a lonely cloud tapped out on the typeface typists once transcribed social medium casting runes

III

The extra scrawl in every corner. PPPS casual conversational the cause of all I can recall
WRITERS PROFILES

JIM BENNETT
Jim Bennett, has written 79 books and numerous chapbooks and pamphlets in a 50 year career as a writer and poet. Jim lives near Liverpool in the UK and tours giving readings of his work throughout the year. He is widely published and has won many competitions and awards for poetry and performance. He runs www.poetrykit.org one of the world’s most successful internet sites for poets.

DOMINIC BOND

LESLEY BURT
Lesley’s poetry has appeared in magazines and online over the years. Her pamphlet, Mr & Mrs Andrews Reframed, was published by Templar Poetry in 2023.

BOB COOPER
Bob Cooper’s latest collection, Listening, listening is available from Naked Eye - https://nakedeyepublishing.co.uk/uncategorized/listening-listening-2/. He lives on the Wirral, UK.

JAN HARRIS
Jan Harris’s poems have appeared in literary journals including Acumen, Envoi, lamb and Poetry Wales, and in various anthologies, including several e-books published by Poetry Kit. Jan was awarded third place in the Wales Poetry Award, 2019. Her first collection, Mute Swans on the Cam, was published in July 2020 by Oversteps Books.

FRANCESCA HUNT
Francesca is a retired Chemistry teacher living in mid-Wales, 30 miles west of Shrewsbury. She enjoys all forms of writing, but poetry is my raison d’être. She has had poems published online, in magazines and in anthologies. She has won minor compétitions, been short-listed for a collection, and is currently putting together a book of poems for publication this Spring.

DAPHNE MILNE
Daphne Milne is back in the UK after five years in Australia. She was a Katharine Susannah Pritchard fellow for 2021. Nominated for the Forward Prize for 2022. Her pamphlet The Blue Boob Club [Indigo Dreams Publishing] was selected as book of the month by Poetry Kit where Daphne was also invited to be a Contemporary Poet for 2020. A microchapbook of jazz poems Dancing With Mr. Dapperman was published by Origami Press 2023. Her pamphlet The Busy Life of Buttons is to be published by Jawbone Press in 2024.
WENDY WEBB
Wendy Webb: Born in the Midlands, Wendy found home and family life in Norfolk. She has edited Star Tips poetry magazine 2001-2021. Published in poetry magazines on and offline, winning a number of poetry competitions and self-publishing biography and poetry. Recently she has dabbled in local radio broadcasting and online poetry publications. She loves nature, the garden, the sea, photography and is always creative. Published recently in: Seventh Quarry, Reach, Sarasvati, Crystal, The Journal, Autumn Voices, Wildfire Words, Lothlorien, Littoral, Poetry Wivenhoe, Drawn to the Light, Dreich, Leicester Literary Review and Poetry Kit.
Her two latest publications with Inherit the Earth:- LANDSCAPES (joint poetry collection with David Norris-Kay & Wendy Webb) Landscapes: Amazon.co.uk: Webb, Wendy Ann, Norris-Kay, David, Meek, CT, Meek, Norris-Kay, David: 979851001659: Books
LOVE’S FLORELOQUENCE (Wendy Ann Webb)
Love's Floreloquence: Amazon.co.uk: Webb, Wendy Ann, Meek, CT, Meek: 9798850867003: Books

GRANT van WINGERDEN
Grant van Wingerden grew up on “Pine Grove Farm”. His grandfather was the third pioneer in the district and his father, a Dutch athlete, coached the school team. There were thirty two families when he left and thirteen children in the school. There are fewer people living there now than live on his side of the street and the school’s no longer there.
Grant’s checkered career included stints as a gas meter reader on Sydney’s north shore and an aluminium racker in Brisbane’s West End. In the office, he helped process FOI requests for immigrants and later worked across the road in Perth’s business district as an AUSTUDY assessor. Contract work as a records management consultant took him into places where files go to die. In his last proper job before retiring, he was student records co-ordinator at a major Sydney university.
He is happy to now be at arm’s length from the intense social environment of former abodes. Birdwatching from the deck and tackling the wild garden are current interests, along with a game where you guess songs before the other player. He has been in bands with musical friends though he can’t play a note.
Grant has kept an active interest in the poetry scene and has been a member of PK for over twenty years.